

TELECALM SOLVES KEY PROBLEMS

Isolation is a growing health epidemic among seniors and is a major factor in the progression of Alzheimer's and other forms of dementia. According to AARP:

- the health risks of prolonged isolation are equivalent to smoking 15 cigarettes a day;
- 79 percent of seniors would rather give up watching TV than talking with their friends and family.

While the phone is an important way for seniors to stay connected, it can also be a source of big problems, especially for those living with cognitive issues such as dementia or Alzheimer's:

- telemarketers trying sell to them or scammers conning them out of banking information;
- loved ones calling places like home shopping channels or nonprofits, buying or donating to everything they see;
- the emotional costs to the family when loved ones call them in the middle of the night, sometimes seven and eight times in a row.

77% of senior scams occur over the phone.

Seniors lose more than $36 BILLION each year to elder financial fraud and abuse.
